Local Resources for Children with Mental Health Needs

Finding Help: Have you noticed a change in your child’s mood or behavior? Has your child’s behavior become too challenging to manage on your own? See the guide below for answers on where to get started.

1. Visit your Primary Care Physician
   A good place to start in getting help is to make an appointment with your Primary Care Physician (PCP). Take your child to complete an annual physical each year to track any changes. If you have non-emergent concerns about your child’s mental health, schedule an appointment to talk about it with their PCP. Your child’s physician can start by ruling out any medical issues that could be causing concerns. If there are not any medical concerns, your PCP can talk with you about other options and next steps.

2. Establish Care with a Mental Health Provider
   Therapists, counselors and psychologists can be a helpful resource for children and adolescents who need a neutral place to share their feelings. They can also help families understand one another by offering resources and support. School Counselors are available to help families who need help locating a mental health provider.

3. Explore Medication Options with a Specialist
   Psychiatrists, nurse practitioners and some psychologists may prescribe medication for some mental health diagnoses. Finding a mental health specialist can be frustrating, as they can be booked several months out for new appointments. Because of the difficulty getting these appointments, even if symptoms improve, keep the appointment to assure access to care when needed. Once you complete the new patient appointment, follow-up appointments are much more available.

4. Continued Support
   If you aren’t sure where to start in finding a mental health provider or if you have financial concerns about how to pay for treatment, you can reach out to a trained intake specialist for more direct support.

5. Children with Intellectual Disabilities May Have Additional Needs
   The Iowa Family Support Network is staffed by individuals with knowledge of local programs and supports that may assist families with additional needs. Call 1-888-425-4371 to get connected. Ask Resources can also support families and connect them to local resources.
Families needing additional support to manage the needs of a child with a mental health diagnosis may benefit from the support of an IHH or SOC program. These programs provide a team approach to work with the family as a whole and offer multiple supports, such as helping to connect to local providers. Dallas County families are served by Ellipsis or Orchard Place.

If you aren’t sure if your child needs to go to the hospital:

Call their mental health provider (psychiatrist, psychologist, therapist, or counselor) and follow the emergency instructions. If your child does not have a mental health provider, call their primary care doctor and ask to talk to a nurse or see if you can make a same-day appointment.

Consider taking your child to the walk-in Behavioral Health Urgent Care Clinic.
